rose with dpdr

poem by zavioryx

There's some connection between seconds and smiles I can't seem to place
And while brevity is the mark of the considerate
I find myself caring less, these days
About what others think of me

So, while crooked hands hook together spools of since-spun thread Tying knots between my fingers,
I wonder whether I'm luckier for it...

Whether, surrounded by shifting sand,
I can unwind an unticking timekeeper
Can put behind that incessant rap, rap, rap
Crying for attention at the corners of the consciousness And turn the mind towards matters at hand

Yet, unplanned, this retrospective reconnaissance reflects exactly what you would expect What, with eight minutes to replicate
The perfect projection of the purpose you were created And if I stare too long..

The image features a dark gray background with a white rectangular area in the center. In the top-right and bottom-left corners, there are decorative elements consisting of several parallel diagonal stripes in various colors: red, yellow, light blue, and green. The text is written in a blue, monospaced font within the white area.

Regret builds like this,
I know it well.
So it's familiar, the way that guilt settles itself
Into the empty space between time and me
But here, the words come swiftly
Like a song
And, in the pitch, blink away
Again, again
Again, if only then, it'll stay

Thank you for ♥ viewing ♥
